

Wednesday
JUNE 8, 2016

★ FREE ★
A Chicago Tribune publication

Back on track

A LOCAL GROUP'S OUTREACH ON THE CTA
IS GIVING HOMELESS PEOPLE THE HELP
AND HOPE THEY NEED 6-7

Formerly homeless
Chicagoan Nicholas Saldana
LENNY GILMORE/REDEYE

Have a smart fridge? You could get hacked 4

Could high socks help the Sox succeed? 8

EAT

NOW OPEN

Mahalo

1501 N. Milwaukee Ave. 708-328-3091

The Wicker Park restaurant from the owners of The Hampton Social and The Bassment serves Hawaiian fare including spicy tuna poke ($14), Spam meatballs with chili-tomato sauce ($12) and slow-roasted pork in banana leaf ($16) paired with tropical cocktails. 3-10 p.m.

SPONSORED

Kevin James will bring his Comedy Tour to the Chicago Theatre on Thursday, June 16. Get your tickets at Ticketmaster now!

DRINK

FARMERS MARKET TEA

Lobby Lounge

11 E. Walton St. 312-646-1300

Relax with a pot of loose-leaf tea, such as Emperor's Chocolate Mint or Georgia Peach Nectar Rooibos, paired with sweet and savory bites featuring produce that chef Nicholas Marino finds at area markets including strawberries with burrata and balsamic as well as carrot custard. 11 a.m.-4:30 p.m. $55. Reservations recommended.

BENDER

Energi Fitness » 215 W. Ohio St. 323-696-2363

Watch the sunset from a River North rooftop as you take a 75-minute vinyasa yoga class set to music from DJ John Simmons playing on wireless headphones. Bring water and your yoga mat. 7:30 p.m. $27. Tickets: benderchicago.com

MENTAL FLOSS TRIVIA SHOW

The Comedy Bar

500 N. LaSalle St. 312-836-0499

Answer questions about pop culture, technology, music and history as you compete for prizes individually or as part of a team at this benefit for John & Hank Green's P4A: Project for Awesome hosted by the magazine's co-founders Will Pearson and Mangesh Hattikudur. 6:30-8:30 p.m. $15. Tickets: eventbrite.com

YOUR STORIES: DESIGN WEEK EDITION

Chicago Design Museum

108 N. State St. 312-894-6263

Museum board members, volunteers and exhibitors share stories based on the theme "practice" to be recorded for the bi-weekly podcast. 7-9 p.m. $15. Tickets: chidm.com/events

3-DAY FORECAST

WEDNESDAY

67°
55 Sunshine!

THURSDAY

77°
58 Warmer

FRIDAY

73°
64 So stormy

Developing Leaders

Advance your career and prepare for leadership roles with a degree from Northwestern University.

EARN YOUR BACHELOR'S DEGREE IN AS LITTLE AS TWO YEARS IN THE BUSINESS LEADERSHIP OPTION

- Continue your academic career at a top-tier university with admissions criteria centered around adult learners who aspire to be or are currently in managerial positions.
- Learn to maximize your performance within your organization.
- Develop communication, team-building, analytic and problem-solving skills.
- Engage in learning within a cohort of working professionals who bring commitment and drive to their education.
- Complete major requirements through Saturday courses held on Northwestern's Chicago campus and online.
- Take advantage of scholarships and competitive tuition rates.
- Earn your Northwestern degree and leverage a global alumni network.

Apply today — the fall quarter application deadline is August 1.

sps.northwestern.edu/business • 312-503-2579

Northwestern | SCHOOL OF PROFESSIONAL STUDIES

IT'S ALL JUST A COUNTING GAME

THE MATH BEHIND THE AP'S EARLY CALL FOR HILLARY CLINTON

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Lifted by a big win in Puerto Rico and a burst of late support from Democratic superdelegates, Hillary Clinton on Monday reached the required 2,383 delegates needed to become the Democratic Party's presumptive nominee for president, according to an Associated Press count.

Here's a look at the count and how the AP determined Clinton has enough delegates to become the presumptive nominee, besting her primary rival, Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders.

What's the count?

Before Tuesday's votes, in the primary elections and caucuses, Clinton had won 1,812 pledged delegates. Sanders had won 1,521. That gave her a lead of 291.

That is far more than the 131-delegate lead that then-Sen. Barack Obama held over Clinton when he clinched the Democratic nomination on June 4, 2008.

Among superdelegates, Clinton had the support of 571. Sanders had the backing of 48. That gave Clinton a lead of 523 superdelegates.

Overall, Clinton had 2,383 delegates, Sanders 1,569.

What comes next?

On Tuesday, voters in six states—California, Montana, New Jersey, New Mexico, North Dakota and South Dakota—headed to the polls, with 694 delegates up for grabs.

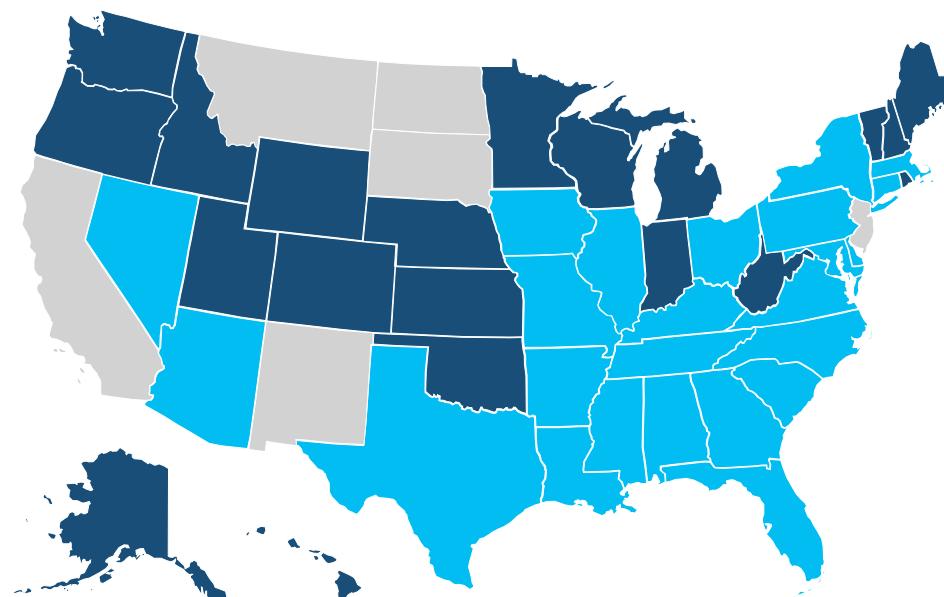

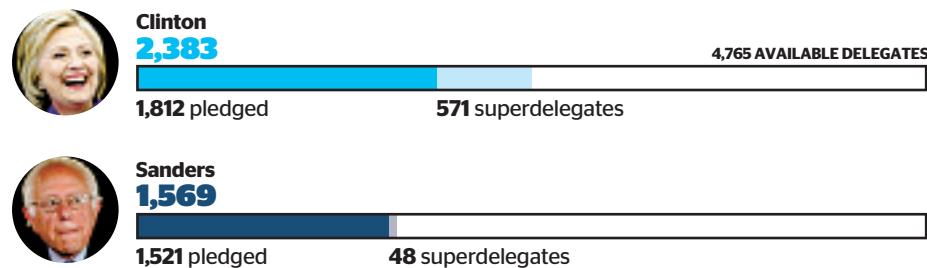

One day of election contests remains: the Washington, D.C., primary, on Tuesday, July 14.

Even if Clinton lost all those contests, she would continue to comfortably pad her delegate lead above the 2,383 threshold. That's because Democrats award pledged delegates in proportion to the vote, so even the loser gets some.

Sanders, meanwhile, would need to win 814 delegates to reach 2,383. Only 813 pledged delegates and uncommitted superdelegates

Delegate tracker

After almost four months of primaries and caucuses, it looks like the Democrats have picked their nominee. Even before Tuesday's election contests, the AP reported that Hillary Clinton had reached the required 2,383 delegates needed to clinch the nomination, defeating Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders. Here's a look at who won which contests, minus Tuesday's results.

*UNITED STATES TERRITORIES NOT INCLUDED IN MAP

SOURCES: THE LOS ANGELES TIMES, ASSOCIATED PRESS

remained before those votes.

How AP counts superdelegates

Of the 4,765 total delegates to the Democratic National Convention, 714 are superdelegates. They are all party officials, governors and members of Congress who may vote for the candidate of their choice, regardless of the outcome in their state's primary or caucus.

The AP surveys the superdelegates throughout the primary season, over months and months, to track whom they plan to support at the July convention.

If a superdelegate tells the AP he or she plans to unequivocally support a certain candidate at the convention, that's added to the candidate's tally.

Those who decline to answer, who say they have yet to make a decision or who express any reservations are listed as uncommitted.

Why count superdelegate votes?

Sanders argues that superdelegates should not be counted, since they don't formally cast their votes until the national convention. He intends to try to win over those who back Clinton by making the case before the party meets in Philadelphia that he would be a stronger general election candidate against presumptive GOP nominee Donald Trump.

But in the AP's survey, which began in late 2015, no superdelegate has flipped support from Clinton to Sanders. None has suggested that could happen.

Since their creation in 1982, superdelegates have rarely strayed from their original endorsements—unless there is a change in the pledged delegate tally. In 2008, some superdelegates flipped from Clinton to Obama after he overcame her early lead in pledged delegates.

The majority of superdelegates have always sided with the winner of the most pledged delegates, which in this election is Clinton.

The Sanders campaign acknowledges that it is unlikely he can switch enough superdelegates from Clinton to overtake her lead among the party insiders unless he is able to win a majority of the pledged delegates.

Clinton remains far ahead on that front. She was on track to safely end the primary season with a majority of pledged delegates even if she lost all six states on Tuesday and in Washington, D.C., the following week.

Is that all?

When it comes to winning the nomination, only delegates matter. But by two other measures, Clinton also comes out on top.

As of Monday afternoon, she had won 29 states and U.S. territories, to 21 for Sanders. She had also won more than 13.6 million votes, compared with nearly 10.6 million for Sanders.

Clinton's big victories across the South and in the biggest states—such as New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Texas—provided her with that wide edge in raw vote and pledged delegates.

The Vermont senator tended to fare better in smaller states and those with caucuses, which limited his overall gains due to their smaller pool of delegates and voters.

ARTS + CULTURE BUILD CITIES.

Join us for an interactive, theatrical event exploring how residents, artists, entrepreneurs, developers, and civic leaders are joining forces in a more equitable process for community revitalization.

PUBLIC CONVENING
JUNE 22, 2016 • 2-5PM • LOGAN CENTER FOR THE ARTS
 Free and open to the public

placelab.uchicago.edu

Place Lab Chicago

@PlaceLabChicago

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO | Place Lab

Place Lab is a partnership between the University of Chicago's Arts + Public Life initiative and the Harris School of Public Policy.

MEDIA PARTNER

WITH
DECLAN MCKENNA

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 14
 ARAGON BALLROOM

ON SALE THIS FRIDAY AT 10AM

GET TICKETS ONLINE AT TICKETMASTER.COM OR 800-745-3000

Every ticket purchased includes the new album SIGNS OF LIGHT 09.09.16

the chatter JOIN THE CONVERSATION

Hungry hackers could raid your smart fridge

By Ally Marotti | BLUE SKY

Your smart refrigerator could one day attack your bank, and you probably wouldn't even know it.

As connected devices become more popular in homes and businesses, experts say hackers may eventually be able to use them for a long-running tech threat: botnets.

Botnets occur when multiple devices are infected with malicious code and formed into a network, said Robert Clyde, a member of the board of directors of the global information systems association ISACA, which is based in suburban Rolling Meadows.

Once hacked, the devices send information back to the hacker controlling the network, Clyde said. The more devices a botnet has control of, the more powerful it can be.

"As long as the bad guys own your device, they may be searching your device or searching the network it's connected to to see what else they can infect," Clyde said. "They may be searching for info like credit cards that can be sold on the dark web."

With a larger-scale botnet, hackers can command devices like a small army, directing them en masse to attack a website or an Internet server.

Hackers can buy botnet services on the dark web, or sell a bot network as a tool.

Traditionally, botnets are made up of PCs and routers. They run incognito, and a slowdown may be the only sign a device is infected.

Most Internet of Things devices are still too primitive to be useful in a botnet—their simplistic operating systems can't handle it, Clyde said. But he has seen botnets rope in more sophisticated surveillance cameras. Smart TVs and gaming consoles also have enough processing capacity to be targets.

As the presence and capabilities of connected devices continue to increase, they could become more useful in botnets, he said.

By 2020, 50 billion devices are expected to be connected to the Internet, according to an AT&T study.

The troops are amassing for the hackers, said Gerry Kane, cybersecurity segment director at insurance provider Zurich North America in suburban Schaumburg.

"[Hackers] can put together an enormous botnet compared to the ones they're able to put together today," he said. "Which is very powerful, particularly for conducting something like a denial of service attack."

It's not just consumers buying Internet of Things devices—businesses are investing as well. A 2015 study from consultant McKinsey & Co. estimated that the economic value surrounding the Internet of Things could be worth $1.1 trillion—about 11 percent of the global economy—by 2025.

This swift increase of devices is part of what opens so many holes, Kane said.

"Security usually takes a backseat to time to market when these devices are being produced," he said. "It means they're susceptible to hackers much more than they should be."

One way to protect most devices, like smartphones and computers, is to update their software, which often closes security holes. But sometimes it's not so easy with the Internet of Things.

"Generally, the vulnerabilities are not known, and even when they are, they are very difficult to fix when they're in the field," Kane said. "Which is why it's so important to address these things early on in the development cycle."

For now, consumers should keep an eye out for updates, and create strong passwords when they can, Clyde said.

"We're at the early stage of the attack trend," he said. "But I do expect it to get much bigger."

Story courtesy of Chicago Tribune's Blue Sky Innovation, featuring news, analysis and events related to innovation, entrepreneurship and the next Big Idea.

CONTACT US

Newsroom: 312-222-4970
redeyechicago.com

Advertising: 312-527-8077
advertising@redeyechicago.com

General Manager:
 Maggie Wartik, mwartik@redeyechicago.com

Classifieds: 312-222-2222
Circulation: redservice@tribune.com

A SIB OF THE TRIB

RedEye, a Chicago Tribune publication, is published five days a week, except on certain holidays. Unsolicited manuscripts, articles, letters and pictures sent to the Chicago Tribune are sent at the owner's risk.

Copyright ©2016 Chicago Tribune Company LLC. All rights reserved as to the entire content. Not for resale.

WORLD'S LARGEST
BLOCK PARTY
OLD ST. PATRICK'S CHURCH
* CHICAGO *

JUNE 25 2016 5:30-11pm UIC FESTIVAL LOT

* PRESENTED BY *

93.3 XRT Lite CONNIE'S pizza
WINTRUST 111 PRESIDENTIAL TOWERS

PURCHASE TICKETS
WorldsLargestBlockParty.com or call 312.648.1590

PASSION PIT and JD MCPHERSON

Sun day fun day.
Must be the sunshine.

With 825 miles of beaches, luxurious oceanfront resorts and exciting nightlife, Florida has endless ways to find fun every day.

VISITFLORIDA.COM

WELLS STREET ART FESTIVAL
OLD TOWN

SATURDAY & SUNDAY
JUNE 11-12

ON WELLS ST. BETWEEN NORTH AVE.
& DIVISION • CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

SAT: 10:00 A.M. TO 10:00 P.M. • SUN: 10:00 A.M. TO 9:00 P.M.
$7 SUGGESTED DONATION

ORGANIZED BY
Old Town
Merchants & Residents Association

BUD LIGHT KHITS 104.3 G.H. CRETORS 101.9 fm THE MIX

4TH SKINNY WBEZ 91.5 CHICAGO SPECIAL EVENTS Find Us!

SSA 48 FB.COM/OLDTOWNCHI • OLDTOWNCHI • #ARTONWELLS
FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL 773.668.3010 • WWW.WELLSSTREETARTFEST.US

The long way home

HELPING HOMELESS PASSENGERS ON THE 'L'

By Harry Huggins | FOR REDEYE

Nicholas Saldana met Sarah Levine-Miles on the "L." He might not have met her at all if it wasn't so cold that morning last year. And without the chance meeting, Saldana might still be homeless.

Saldana survived the cold by sleeping on the CTA Blue Line, riding it all the way from Forest Park to O'Hare and trying to catch as much rest as he could before a conductor or station agent kicked him off.

Saldana had rotting teeth when he met Levine-Miles at the O'Hare station, but outreach workers avoid jumping right into difficult topics like health care. First, they talked about music. Building rapport is always the first step. "The majority of folks we work with haven't trusted people in a very long time and have usually been burned by or forgotten by society," Levine-Miles said. "Without building trust and relationships, there is really no way we can move forward with any of the other stuff."

That trust is the key to developing the determination Saldana needed to figure out complicated things like getting dentures, glasses and, eventually, his own apartment in Ashburn by Midway Airport.

Levine-Miles is a street outreach worker for the Chicago nonprofit Thresholds. This winter, the city saw thousands of Chicagoans like Saldana boarding the Red and Blue lines and laying across three or four seats just to stay warm or avoid harassment on the streets or in shelters.

Every January, volunteers and city workers canvass the whole of Chicago to count the entire homeless population, both in shelters and out on the streets. The 2015 count found 2,055 people, more unsheltered homeless people than at any time since the count began tracking that information in 2005. They were sleeping in CTA trains, under viaducts, on park benches and elsewhere outside at the time of the January count.

The previous high count was 1,727 in 2005. Jennifer Rottner at the Department of Family and Support Services attributes 2015's high number to warmer weather, which makes shelters less enticing, and noted that they counted more people than usual on the CTA.

Thresholds' street team is one of a few groups trying to reach homeless people outside of traditional shelters and connect them, when they're ready, to lifelines of support. The Chicago Department of Family and Support Services and Catholic Charities of Chicago also do street outreach.

For their part, the CTA teaches staff to "actively encourage" homeless riders to find shelters and homeless services, spokesman Jeff Tolman said. To this end, the CTA puts extra security guards on the Red and Blue lines to check out trains from midnight to 8 a.m.

Saldana became homeless after an intense family argument about money escalated to a point where his sister and mother kicked him out of their house. He is gay and HIV positive; he's struggled multiple times with AIDS-like symptoms but considers himself a "miracle patient." He talks fervently about anything with anyone, jumping from topic to topic at his whim, and he stands strong in his convictions.

Shelters provide access to the social safety net that can help people find housing, through social workers and case management. But the people you see sleeping on trains and buses or laying across a warm subway grate either chose to avoid shelters or were kicked out and can't return.

Saldana felt threatened in shelters. He is in line with the nature of CTA fares: One swipe entitles a passenger only to a one-way ride and an indoor transfer.

Even when they can sleep, homeless CTA passengers are often the subject of ire from their fellow riders.

Homeless people notice and feel the effects they have on other CTA riders. Melvin Enoch used to ride the Blue Line but lives with his sister now. He would feel ashamed when people went out of their way to avoid a car he was in.

"It embarrassed me!" Enoch said. "Gave me a funny feeling. But it gave me the incentive to try to do better and get off of the trains."

Shayna Wiley, also in Wicker Park, admitted that she is put off by the smell of some homeless people on the trains, but she doesn't blame them for their condition.

"It's not like there's that many places for them to go," Wiley said. "I know shelters aren't always the best places, so maybe they feel safe on the train, and who are you to say that they can't?"

Wiley goes one step further than the many commuters who try their best to ignore homeless people.

"I'm sure people don't want to be bothered, but ignoring them isn't necessarily the correct thing to do either, because they are people at the end of the day," Wiley said.

John Czapkowicz has worked with Thresholds' outreach team for more than six years. He sees how people like Saldana and Enoch can fall through Chicago's social safety nets. Homeless services exist, but they're mainly geared toward people with mental disabilities.

"People with mental illness get lost, ostracized, exiled because they can't follow the rules of the mainstream community shelters," Czapkowicz said. "I see homeless mental health services as the frontlines of the whole industry."

Although Czapkowicz believes that a train is an "ideal pseudo-shelter," he said the only way to get people permanently off the streets is with more investment in affordable housing.

Even after a Thresholds member gets out of the trains and into a home, it takes a lot of effort to stay there. If someone can't continue to pay rent, buy food or deal with landlords and neighbors, they'll likely end up back in the trains. So the Thresholds team continues meeting and working with people long after they've found an apartment.

"Someone like [Saldana] who attributes so much of his success to us ... it's really him!" Levine-Miles said. "He has so much joy and determination. Just knowing that my help is important to him and seeing what he can do and the changes he's making in his life, I feel lucky to experience those transformations."

HARRY HUGGINS IS A REDEYE CONTRIBUTOR.

said he loves "kids, dogs, hipsters, old, young," but the only people he doesn't trust are other homeless people.

"I know what they can do to you," Saldana said. "They can rip you off. I admit, I was homeless, but I never ripped anybody off."

Mada Leanga heads the Thresholds street outreach team. Thresholds mainly provides services for people with mental illnesses. She sees that the people they serve don't want to be institutionalized or abide by the shelters' strict rules about alcohol and drugs that many who are mentally ill use to self-medicate.

"Just being homeless is traumatizing, so people don't like to have another person next to them, and when you're experiencing paranoia, it's even worse," Leanga said. "There's not a lot of housing for homeless people with mental illnesses. They think it's safer on the streets."

But the trains can be just as dangerous. Saldana described being harassed by other passengers. He said two men once smacked him on the Red Line and tried to mug him after hearing him talking with some friends about Chicago's gay pride parade.

To reach people on trains and in the street,

Thresholds created a team focused on finding and engaging those who are often hardest to track down. Their team of six young social workers and outreach specialists traverses Chicago's network of CTA trains and the Pedway downtown. Their backpacks hold paperwork for people they'll meet during the day and supplies such as socks.

They look for a few longtime members and any newcomers they can assist, people who exhibit common signs of mental illnesses such as talking to themselves, wild gesturing and noticeable neglect of hygiene. When they find somebody, the outreach team starts trying to build a relationship. They offer to buy them coffee or some food at a nearby restaurant. When you spend all day being ignored by passers-by, just having someone talk to you is huge.

"We don't judge anybody," Leanga said. "We offer, as much as possible, validation and empathy. We realize there's a reason they're using. We accept people for who they are and try to encourage the idea of trying to make sure that they're safe."

But people as accepting as trained social workers are rare on the trains. Saldana and multiple other homeless CTA riders speak of conductors and station agents waking them at the end of the line and kicking them off the train. Tolman said this policy

"We don't judge anybody. We offer, as much as possible, validation and empathy. We realize there's a reason they're using. We accept people for who they are and try to encourage the idea of trying to make sure that they're safe."

— Mada Leanga, head of the Thresholds street outreach team look surprised when I call them by name," Levine-Miles said. "That warm interaction I have with people ... I acknowledge their humanity, and it makes their day to be someone worthy of greeting."

In the course of a conversation, the team asks them about income, assessing their most immediate needs for clothing or medical attention.

If the homeless person seems ready to move toward more long-term assistance, Thresholds workers will work as fast as possible to connect them with medical benefits, food stamps, social security—whatever they can get. And unlike most shelters, the mobile assessment units don't care if a person is staying clean.

"We don't judge anybody," Leanga said. "We offer, as much as possible, validation and empathy. We realize there's a reason they're using. We accept people for who they are and try to encourage the idea of trying to make sure that they're safe."

"Someone like [Saldana] who attributes so much of his success to us ... it's really him!" Levine-Miles said. "He has so much joy and determination. Just knowing that my help is important to him and seeing what he can do and the changes he's making in his life, I feel lucky to experience those transformations."

HARRY HUGGINS IS A REDEYE CONTRIBUTOR.

ABOVE: Raymond Ferguson (center), who has been homeless for nearly five years, talks with Sarah Levine-Miles and John Czapkowicz, who do outreach for the Chicago nonprofit Thresholds, at a Red Line station on May 26.

RIGHT: Nicholas Saldana, who used to be homeless and slept on "L" trains to survive the cold, rides the Orange Line on Tuesday.

LENNY GILMORE/REDEYE PHOTOS

Shelters provide access to the social safety net that can help people find housing, through social workers and case management. But the people you see sleeping on trains and buses or laying across a warm subway grate either chose to avoid shelters or were kicked out and can't return. Saldana felt threatened in shelters. He

"People I see on the train pretty often

The long way home

HELPING HOMELESS PASSENGERS ON THE 'L'

By Harry Huggins | FOR REDEYE

Nicholas Saldana met Sarah Levine-Miles on the "L." He might not have met her at all if it wasn't so cold that morning last year. And without the chance meeting, Saldana might still be homeless.

Saldana survived the cold by sleeping on the CTA Blue Line, riding it all the way from Forest Park to O'Hare and trying to catch as much rest as he could before a conductor or station agent kicked him off.

Saldana had rotting teeth when he met Levine-Miles at the O'Hare station, but outreach workers avoid jumping right into difficult topics like health care. First, they talked about music. Building rapport is always the first step. "The majority of folks we work with haven't trusted people in a very long time and have usually been burned by or forgotten by society," Levine-Miles said. "Without building trust and relationships, there is really no way we can move forward with any of the other stuff."

That trust is the key to developing the determination Saldana needed to figure out complicated things like getting dentures, glasses and, eventually, his own apartment in Ashburn by Midway Airport.

Levine-Miles is a street outreach worker for the Chicago nonprofit Thresholds. This winter, the city saw thousands of Chicagoans like Saldana boarding the Red and Blue lines and laying across three or four seats just to stay warm or avoid harassment on the streets or in shelters.

Every January, volunteers and city workers canvass the whole of Chicago to count the entire homeless population, both in shelters and out on the streets. The 2015 count found 2,055 people, more unsheltered homeless people than at any time since the count began tracking that information in 2005. They were sleeping in CTA trains, under viaducts, on park benches and elsewhere outside at the time of the January count.

The previous high count was 1,727 in 2005. Jennifer Rottner at the Department of Family and Support Services attributes 2015's high number to warmer weather, which makes shelters less enticing, and noted that they counted more people than usual on the CTA.

Thresholds' street team is one of a few groups trying to reach homeless people outside of traditional shelters and connect them, when they're ready, to lifelines of support. The Chicago Department of Family and Support Services and Catholic Charities of Chicago also do street outreach.

For their part, the CTA teaches staff to "actively encourage" homeless riders to find shelters and homeless services, spokesman Jeff Tolman said. To this end, the CTA puts extra security guards on the Red and Blue lines to check out trains from midnight to 8 a.m.

Saldana became homeless after an intense family argument about money escalated to a point where his sister and mother kicked him out of their house. He is gay and HIV positive; he's struggled multiple times with AIDS-like symptoms but considers himself a "miracle patient." He talks fervently about anything with anyone, jumping from topic to topic at his whim, and he stands strong in his convictions.

Shelters provide access to the social safety net that can help people find housing, through social workers and case management. But the people you see sleeping on trains and buses or laying across a warm subway grate either chose to avoid shelters or were kicked out and can't return.

Saldana felt threatened in shelters. He said he loves "kids, dogs, hipsters, old, young," but the only people he doesn't trust are other homeless people.

"I know what they can do to you," Saldana said. "They can rip you off. I admit, I was homeless, but I never ripped anybody off."

Mada Leanga heads the Thresholds street outreach team. Thresholds mainly provides services for people with mental illnesses. She sees that the people they serve don't want to be institutionalized or abide by the shelters' strict rules about alcohol and drugs that many who are mentally ill use to self-medicate.

"Just being homeless is traumatizing, so people don't like to have another person next to them, and when you're experiencing paranoia, it's even worse," Leanga said. "There's not a lot of housing for homeless people with mental illnesses. They think it's safer on the streets."

But the trains can be just as dangerous. Saldana described being harassed by other passengers. He said two men once smacked him on the Red Line and tried to mug him after hearing him talking with some friends about Chicago's gay pride parade.

To reach people on trains and in the street,

Thresholds created a team focused on finding and engaging those who are often hardest to track down. Their team of six young social workers and outreach specialists traverses Chicago's network of CTA trains and the Pedway downtown. Their backpacks hold paperwork for people they'll meet during the day and supplies such as socks.

They look for a few longtime members and any newcomers they can assist, people who exhibit common signs of mental illnesses such as talking to themselves, wild gesturing and noticeable neglect of hygiene. When they find somebody, the outreach team starts trying to build a relationship. They offer to buy them coffee or some food at a nearby restaurant. When you spend all day being ignored by passers-by, just having someone talk to you is huge.

"We don't judge anybody," Leanga said. "We offer, as much as possible, validation and empathy. We realize there's a reason they're using. We accept people for who they are and try to encourage the idea of trying to make sure that they're safe."

But people as accepting as trained social workers are rare on the trains. Saldana and multiple other homeless CTA riders speak of conductors and station agents waking them at the end of the line and kicking them off the train. Tolman said this policy is in line with the nature of CTA fares: One swipe entitles a passenger only to a one-way ride and an indoor transfer.

Even when they can sleep, homeless CTA passengers are often the subject of ire from their fellow riders.

Homeless people notice and feel the effects they have on other CTA riders. Melvin Enoch used to ride the Blue Line but lives with his sister now. He would feel ashamed when people went out of their way to avoid a car he was in.

"It embarrassed me," Enoch said. "Gave me a funny feeling. But it gave me the incentive to try to do better and get off of the trains."

Shayna Wiley, also in Wicker Park, admitted that she is put off by the smell of some homeless people on the trains, but she doesn't blame them for their condition.

"It's not like there's that many places for them to go," Wiley said. "I know shelters aren't always the best places, so maybe they feel safe on the train, and who are you to say that they can't?"

Wiley goes one step further than the many commuters who try their best to ignore homeless people.

"I'm sure people don't want to be bothered, but ignoring them isn't necessarily the correct thing to do either, because they are people at the end of the day," Wiley said.

John Czapkowicz has worked with Thresholds' outreach team for more than six years. He sees how people like Saldana and Enoch can fall through Chicago's social safety nets. Homeless services exist, but they're mainly geared toward people with out mental disabilities.

"People with mental illness get lost, ostracized, exiled because they can't follow the rules of the mainstream community shelters," Czapkowicz said. "I see homeless mental health services as the frontlines of the whole industry."

Although Czapkowicz believes that a train is an "ideal pseudo-shelter," he said the only way to get people permanently off the streets is with more investment in affordable housing.

Even after a Thresholds member gets out of the trains and into a home, it takes a lot of effort to stay there. If someone can't continue to pay rent, buy food or deal with landlords and neighbors, they'll likely end up back in the trains. So the Thresholds team continues meeting and working with people long after they've found an apartment.

"Someone like [Saldana] who attributes so much of his success to us ... it's really him!" Levine-Miles said. "He has so much joy and determination. Just knowing that my help is important to him and seeing what he can do and the changes he's making in his life, I feel lucky to experience those transformations."

HARRY HUGGINS IS A REDEYE CONTRIBUTOR.

ABOVE: Raymond Ferguson (center), who has been homeless for nearly five years, talks with Sarah Levine-Miles and John Czapkowicz, who do outreach for the Chicago nonprofit Thresholds, at a Red Line station on May 26.

RIGHT: Nicholas Saldana, who used to be homeless and slept on "L" trains to survive the cold, rides the Orange Line on Tuesday.

LENNY GILMORE/REDEYE PHOTOS

look surprised when I call them by name," Levine-Miles said. "That warm interaction I have with people ... I acknowledge their humanity, and it makes their day to be someone worthy of greeting."

In the course of a conversation, the team asks them about income, assessing their most immediate needs for clothing or medical attention.

If the homeless person seems ready to move toward more long-term assistance, Thresholds workers will work as fast as possible to connect them with medical benefits, food stamps, social security—whatever they can get. And unlike most shelters, the mobile assessment units don't care if a person is staying clean.

"We don't judge anybody," Leanga said. "We offer, as much as possible, validation and empathy. We realize there's a reason they're using. We accept people for who they are and try to encourage the idea of trying to make sure that they're safe."

But people as accepting as trained social workers are rare on the trains. Saldana and multiple other homeless CTA riders speak of conductors and station agents waking them at the end of the line and kicking them off the train. Tolman said this policy

sports

White Sox closer David Robertson

AP

HIGH SOCKS = SPEED?

FASHION ADVICE AND BASEBALL WISDOM FROM SOX CLOSER DAVID ROBERTSON

By Matt Lindner | FOR REDEYE

White Sox closer David Robertson is hoping his team's newest acquisition can take him to school.

"I'm hoping I can get a change-up pitching lesson from him because he's got a really good one," Robertson said of James Shields, the starting pitcher the Sox acquired for a pair of prospects on Saturday. "He's got good stuff. He battles out there. I'm glad he's on our team now."

Shields makes his Sox debut Wednesday against Washington for a team that has gone from the penthouse to near the outhouse in the past month.

Need proof?

On May 9, the White Sox were 23-10.

They'd gone 6-18 since then heading into Tuesday's series opener against the Nationals, including having dropped eight of their past 10 games.

That might be cause for alarm for fans, but Robertson said despite the results of the past month, everything will be all right.

"We're OK," he said. "Baseball is a really tough sport. You get beat down in this sport a lot. It's just a matter of digging deep and turning the season around. We're still in the thick of things. We just have to put some good series together, and once we do that, we can get back on track and be where we need to be."

Robertson himself took center stage Monday at the Palmer House Hilton, hosting a casino night fundraiser for his High Socks for Hope foundation. He started the charity in 2011 after a tornado devastated his hometown of Tuscaloosa, Ala., leaving more than 50 people dead and causing more than $2 billion worth of damage. Teammates Chris Sale and Todd Frazier and others joined Robertson for a night of fun, which included a silent auction and games.

Robertson's charity is named after his propensity to pull his socks on his uniform high, rather than cover them by pulling the cuffs on his uniform pants all the way down. He said he's been going high-soled at least as far back as his college days at Alabama.

Part of the reason he revels in this particular sartorial splendor that in some way draws attention to his calves is the fact that it makes him feel more aerodynamic.

"I feel faster, like I can pitch better like that," he said. "It just feels comfortable to me. I don't know, I like the way it looks."

So how long until we see all of the White Sox wearing high socks?

Robertson said that depends on whether his teammates share his belief that they too are better when their calves aren't covered by their pants.

"Guys are different," he said. "They're superstitious. If we win one, then they're gonna put the pants down. If we win five or six games in a row, they're gonna keep them up. It's weird like that."

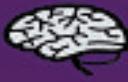

MATT LINDNER IS A REDEYE CONTRIBUTOR. @MATTLINDNER

DO YOU SUFFER FROM NEW ONSET LOW BACK
PAIN?

ARE YOU AGE 18 OR OLDER?

You may be able to participate in a clinical research study that may involve treatment.

Researchers at Northwestern University are trying to understand the brain and what causes low back pain.

Participants will be compensated for their time and travel.

CALL 312-503-6475
TO LEARN MORE.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY
STUDY CODE: 1444 | DR. APAKHIAN | DEPT OF PHYSIOLOGY

CHICAGO

GREAT SUMMER ESCAPES!
3 Great Ways to the Sea Floor: Music, Art, Architecture & More

SHE'S GOT GAME
Basketball Superstar Elena Delle Donne

Meet Elena Delle Donne, the best female basketball player on the planet.

ON NEWSSTANDS NOW

Subscribe at 800-999-0879 or chicagomag.com/access

SUMMER+FALL+WINTER+SPRING EVENTS IN THE PARKS ALL YEAR ROUND

Download the new

My Chi Parks™ app now!

1000+ free events, in the parks, all year round.

And yes, the app is free too...

City of Chicago, Rahm Emanuel, Mayor
Chicago Park District Board of Commissioners
Michael P. Kelly, General Superintendent & CEO

For more information about your Chicago Park District visit www.chicagoparkdistrict.com or call 312.742.7529 or 312.747.2001 (TTY).

SEE ALL OF ME
AT

WORLD FAMOUS
ADMIRAL
★★ THEATRE ★★

LAWRENCE & PULASKI
ADMIRALX.COM
OPEN TIL 6AM

REDEYE

TELL US HOW YOU REALLY FEEL

WE'RE LISTENING, CHICAGO.

Share your thoughts in our RedEye reader panel.
You could win a $100 GIFT CARD.

redeyechicago.com/readerpanel

on sale

* = JOSH TERRY RECOMMENDED SHOWS

ON SALE 1 P.M.
WEDNESDAY

*Pile, Saturday,
July 23 ($12, 17+)
at Downstairs @
Subterranean

ON SALE
10 A.M. FRIDAY

Amos Lee, Friday,
Oct. 28 ($39.50-$59.50, all ages) at
Chicago Theatre

*Angel Olsen,
Tuesday, Sept. 27
($20-$25, 17+) at
Thalia Hall

*Blind Pilot, Friday,
Sept. 9 ($19-$29, all ages) at Thalia Hall

Brian Fallon and the Crowes, Ryan
Bingham, Tuesday,
Sept. 20 ($29.50, 18+)
at Riviera Theatre

Crystal Fighters,
Tuesday, Oct. 4 ($20,
18+) at Park West

David Crosby,
Wednesday, Aug. 31
($52-$126, all ages) at

Thalia Hall

EI Ten Eleven, Friday,
Nov. 18 ($16-$18, 18+)
at Lincoln Hall

Glass Animals,
Thursday, Oct. 6
($35, 18+) at
Riviera Theatre

*The Head and the Heart, Declan
McKenna, Friday,
Oct. 14 ($42, all ages)
at Aragon Ballroom

Liima, Tuesday,
Sept. 27 ($14-$16, 21+)
at Schubas

Moon Taxi, Friday,
Oct. 14 ($20, all ages)
at Park West

*Patti Smith, Friday,
Dec. 30 ($45, 18+)
at Riviera Theatre

Prophets of Rage,
Saturday, Sept. 3
($99.50, all ages) at
Hollywood Casino
Ampitheatre

Rocky Votolato,

Chris Staples,
Thursday, Sept. 8
($18-$20, 21+) at
Schubas

ON SALE
NOON FRIDAY
Bob Log III, The
Kevin Dowling
Fitness Hour,
Sunday, Aug. 7 ($12,
21+) at Schubas

Even the Jackals with Royal
Outsiders, Aaron
Williams Band and
Joe Renardo, Friday,
July 1 ($10-$15, 18+)
at Lincoln Hall

The North 41 (fka Walsher Clemons),
Joe Hertler & the Rainbow Seekers,
Nasty Snacks, Friday,
Aug. 19 ($10-$12, 21+)
at Lincoln Hall

ON SALE 10 A.M.
SATURDAY
Anderson Wakeman
Rabin, Saturday,
Nov. 5 ($48.50-
$128.50, all ages) at
Chicago Theatre

ON SALE 11 A.M.
SATURDAY

*Barrence Whitfield
& the Savages,
Wednesday, Sept. 14
($12-$22, all ages) at
Space

Lucy Wainwright
Roche & Antje
Duvekot, Tuesday,
Sept. 13 ($17-$30, all ages) at Space

ON SALE NOW
Ages and Ages,
Thursday, Sept. 15
($10-$12, 17+) at Beat
Kitchen

*Bayonne, Yawn,
Friday, July 15 ($10,
21+) at Schubas

Hollis Brown,
Thursday, July 21 ($12,
21+) at Beat Kitchen

Night Beats, Friday,
July 22 ($10-$12, 21+)
at Beat Kitchen

NO PURCHASE NECESSARY. PURCHASE WILL NOT INCREASE YOUR CHANCES OF WINNING. Runs from 2/1/16 at 12:00 AM PT to 12/31/16 at 11:59 PM PT. Open only to adults 18+ as of entry date who are legal residents of the Chicago DMA. Void where prohibited & outside sweepstakes area. Excludes Sponsor employees & their immediate family members. To enter, complete survey via email or online through sites found on Tribune Publishing channels (i.e. email, print, digital, or social media). Limit 1 entry per person/Email. 2 Prizes: $100 Amazon.com Gift Card. Odds of winning depend on # of eligible entries. Other rules apply. For full rules, mail request w/ SASE to Sponsor (Tribune Publishing), 425 N Michigan Ave, Chicago, IL 60611.

DIFFICULTY RATING: ★ ★ ★ ☆ ☆

TUESDAY'S SOLUTIONS

NEW	A	C	T	U	P	S	T	A	B
OMIT	L	O	U	S	U	R	G	E
RUDE	L	O	N	E	R	M	E	E	T
SENSELESS	S				M	E	D	S
PIGS	I	D	O
IMBIBE	C	A	S	A	N	O	V	A
NOONS	B	R	U	T	E	R	A	G
LOUIS	B	O	O	K	S	H	A	L	O
ART	G	R	O	W	S	A	T	I	N
WESTWARD	R	E	M	E	D	Y
	A	B	C	F	O	E	S
GLIB	E	N	T	R	U	S	T	E	D
ROLL	L	U	A	U	S	E	V	E	S
ABLE	E	D	D	I	E	R	A	P	T
BEST	T	E	S	T	S		S	P	Y

ACT	UP	STAB
OMIT	LOUSE	URGE
RUDE	LONER	MEET
SENSELESS	SMEDS
PIGS	I DO
IMBIBE	CASANOVA
NOONS	BRUTE	RAG
LOUIS	BOOKS	HALO
ART	GROWS	SATIN
WESTWARD	REMEDY
	A B C	F O E S
GLIB	E N T R U S T E D
ROLL	L U A U S	E V E S
ABLE	E D D I E	R A P T
BEST	T E S T S	S P Y

TUESDAY'S SOLUTIONS

ACROSS

1 Attila's men
5 Word in many bowling alley names
10 Sunrise direction
14 Bewildered
15 Wipe away
16 "Rhapsody in _"; Gershwin composition
17 Hand- _; not stitched with a machine
18 Peas & carrots
20 Electronically sent file format
21 Canisters
22 Composer Franz _
23 Vital artery
25 Brooch
26 Comedian Tim
28 Scanty
31 Egged on
32 Borscht ingredients
34 Actor Kilmer
35 Shiny on top
37 Child's plastic building bricks
38 Relinquish
39 Gobbled up
40 Bereaved wife
41 "Ave _"
42 Cibrian and Van Halen
44 Deep valley
45 Taxing agcy.
46 Piece of tough fibrous tissue
47 Trap
50 Melody
51 "...FDR, __, DDE, JFK..."
54 Far-reaching
57 Lunch spot
59 Current letters
60 Lift with effort
60 Press clothing
61 TV's "Father Knows __"
62 Couch potato
63 Money owed

DOWN

1 Part of a trapdoor latch
2 Secondhand
3 Recently invented
4 __, Diego, CA
5 Opposite of seriousness
6 Amphitheater

1	2	3	4		5	6	7	8	9		10	11	12	13
14					15						16
17					18						19
20					21						22
					23	24					25
26	27										28			29
31							32	33			34			35
36							37				38
39							40				41
	42		43								44
47	48	49									50
54							55	56			57
58							59				60
61							62				63

7 Henpecks
8 Suffix for Siam or Japan
9 __ up; arrange
10 Flowing back
11 " __ well that ends well"
12 Egyptian canal
13 Exam
19 Assumed name
21 Paper fastener
24 Was in the red
25 Animals in the house

26 Castro's land
27 Give a speech
28 Cat's comment
29 In all places
30 News source, for many
32 Cribs and cots
33 Self-esteem
35 Thin; slender
37 Fibs
38 Walking stick
40 Metal threads
41 Lion's neck hair
43 Not roundabout

44 Coal fragment
46 Debonair
47 Q-tip, for one
48 Pleasant
49 Inserts
50 Greenish-blue
52 Messy person
53 Color slightly
55 __ Beta Kappa
56 Blushing
57 __ without; abstained from

TODAY'S CELEBRITY BIRTHDAYS

» Rapper Kanye West, 39    » Actor Keenan Ivory Wayans, 58    » Singer Nancy Sinatra, 76
 » Actress Julianne Margulies, 50    » Singer Bonnie Tyler, 65    » Actor Jerry Stiller, 89

CHICAGO'S
VERY OWN
NEWS APP!

WGN 9 NEWS

DOWNLOAD NOW!

Available on the App Store   Google play

WGN 9 CHICAGO'S VERY OWN

WE ARE HERE TO HELP! NOT JUDGE!

HEROIN AND PAIN PILL ADDICTION

LOW COST &amp; CONFIDENTIAL

$20.00 TRANSPORTATION
CREDIT FOR JOINING

with mention of this ad.

- Same Day Dosing
- Compassionate Staff
- All Public Transportation at Front Door
- FREE Gourmet Coffee
- FREE Phone Use (local & long distance)
- FREE Week of Services on Your Birthday

Sundance Methadone Treatment Center
4545 BROADWAY, CHICAGO • (847) 744-0262 • www.SUNDANCECHICAGO.COM

Sorry, Danny

Chris Messina's status on "The Mindy Project" has been downgraded from series regular to recurring guest star. According to tvline.com, his character, Danny Castellano, will continue to pop in and out when the Hulu comedy returns for a fifth season. Messina had a much lighter workload during the fourth season, as he started out as the titular character's fiance, but then their engagement was called off. Ugh. Whatever. Why are we even watching this show anymore if it's not for the great romance between Mindy and Danny?

THE DIGIT

$936,662,225

That's how much money "Star Wars: The Force Awakens" made at the domestic box office in its 168-day run, according to Box Office Mojo. The A.V. Club says the movie pulled in $176 million more than the previous domestic top-earner, 2009's "Avatar." Oh man, what a shocker.

'Girlboss' finds its girl

"Tomorrowland" star Britt Robertson is joining Netflix's "Girlboss," based on the book by Nasty Gal founder Sophia Amoruso. Robertson will star in the series as Sophia, "a rebellious, broke anarchist" who starts a vintage-fashion retail business and, when it takes off, "realizes the value and the difficulty of being the boss of her own life," according to vulture.com. "Pitch Perfect" writer Kay Cannon will act as the project's showrunner. Woohoo.

Not 'hood' enough

Before "Scandal" and Olivia Pope, Kerry Washington was cast in not one but two other pilots. Both of those pilots went to series, but Washington was fired for not being "hood" enough, she said, according to variety.com. Washington and Aziz Ansari sat down and talked about their careers for an episode of Variety's "Actors on Actors." Washington also said she has discovered that that kind of typecasting isn't exclusive to racial cliches. She said, "I've had friends of mine say they're tired of 'gayface,' and I was like, 'What's gayface?' They were like, 'It's the gay version of blackface, like come in and be more, like, effeminate.'"

THE QUOTE

"I JUST KNEW THAT I WAS FUNNY, AND I KNEW THAT IT WAS JUST A MATTER OF TIME. I DIDN'T KNOW WHAT WAS GOING TO ACTUALLY HAPPEN—THIS IS DEFINITELY WAY BIGGER THAN I THOUGHT—BUT I KNEW THERE WAS NO WAY I WAS GOING TO BE THAT FUNNY AND NOBODY WAS GOING TO NOTICE IT."

—Leslie Jones, to Elle Magazine, on being funny.